The question has been eagerly discussed among the captains of the various com-panies as to whether the date of commissions as captains of a company of volum of the United States from Virginia will be recognized or the date of the old commissions in the State troops. This matter has not yet been decided, but it is very likely that the seniority of commis-sion in the volunteers before being mus-tered into the service of the United States will determine seniority in the new service.

THE REJECTED ONES.
While the free-and-easy side of military life is attracting attention and no little envy at this time, there is one feature that is strikingly touching. The examining surgeons have been forced to reject a number of volunteers for physical deficiencies. Most of these were particularly acceptance of the service of the ficiencies. Most of these were particularly anxious to enter the service of the United States in the war with Spain. They had been with their companies for years, and were deeply attached to them. The idea of their comrades with whom they had so often eaten, siept, marched, and associated in the various phases of camp life, going off to the war and leaving them behind is keenly disappointing to them. There were close the of comng them behind is keen; to them. There were close ties of com-panionship and sympathy that linked them together and it looks hard to them them together and it looks hard to them after many years of membership in their companis to bid their friends and comrades good bye, and turn their faces away from the beat of the drum and the martial strains so dear to the heart of every soldier There is something sad about it all and more than once yesterday was a pathetic scene witnessed as some of those who were rejected walked slowly away with bowed head, and gloomy faces. gloomy faces,

A PATHETIC SOLILOQUY.

As I passed Tenth and Broad streets last night two uniformed men lingered near the corner. There was a disappont-ed look in the face of each. They seemnear the corner. There was a disappointed look in the face of each. They seemed to be thinking of something far away and an expression of discouragement setand an expression of discouragement settled over their brows.

"Nothing left to do," said one of them dejectedly. "Never thought it would come to this. All the boy "Il move off in a day or two, breaks the links forever," and he turned his head aside to brush away the tear.

His companion tried to say something but his throat went back on him. He took out his handkerchief and wiped his eyes. Tears had crept down his cheeks. Finally he braced up and with a heavy sigh said in uncertain tones:

"Here I've been a member of old Company C, for seven years. We've spent a many a night in camp, and marched many an hour together. Every man in there 's a friend of mine, brother and two cousins. Now that doctor comes along and turns me down right at the "He stopped abruptly and stepped aside at if to make another start. His voice grew husky. as if to make another start. His voice grew husky. Presently he continued with apparent effort. "Just at the time when we have a chance to go into battle and show what kind o' stuff we're made of, they turn us down and tell us to go back, they don't want us. Old man Sherman said war was hell. Right. This is the hell of it."

And then his comrade threw his arm around his shoulders and with dejected look they walked silently away. As they disappeared around the corner with tears in their eyes on word was barely sudible, "cooktall."
